Resources to help GPs work with First Nations patients who have complex health needs

Health care that meets the needs of First Nations patients can help improve health outcomes. These resources help health services provide culturally sensitive health care.

The resources include:

- fact sheets about Aboriginal health
- ideas about how to work with the Stolen Generations
- flyers
- referral forms
- posters.

You can download all the resources or choose the resources you want.

We trust this resource

We trust this resource because it is:

- Made to help, not for profit
- Made by people who know a lot about the topic
- Made in Australia

We've checked this resource, and you can follow our guide to know if health information is true and right for you.

This resource was made by

North Western Melbourne Primary Health Network

North Western Melbourne Primary Health Network (NWMPHN) helps people stay well by helping health services to deliver better, more accessible

If something is accessible, it means that everyone can use and understand something. For example:

- accessible buildings have ramps so that people with wheelchairs can come inside
- accessible health information uses easy words that most people understand
- accessible health services make changes so that people who feel worried about seeing the doctor feel calm and in control.

Accessibility makes things fair for people with a disability.

primary care across Melbourne’s northern, western and inner-city areas.

- Visit